MEDIA RELEASE

T:>Works' PerForm returns with Ho Rui An and a critical perspective on the Asian "miracle"

Singapore, 11 November 2021 – After a successful inaugural keynote in May 2021 by PerForm fellow Shubigi Rao, T:>Works' PerForm returns with a second fellow, artist and writer Ho Rui An. He will deliver a two-part programme beginning with a digital keynote, From Crisis to Value. The keynote draws from his in-situ research in multiple Asian countries investigating the effects of globalism on Asian financial capitals. Following the keynote is a video installation of his Asia the Unmiraculous which opens in artspace 72-13, Singapore.

PerForm, a fellowship platform initiated by Dr. Ong Keng Sen, Artistic Director of T:>Works, harnesses "the translocal", such as contextualised knowledge, situated practices, or a fellow's sustained engagement with local communities. The translocal honours a local which is simultaneous and interdependent on other locals. It emphasises that all localities are dependent on each other, even though they may be physically very distant, to collaborate together, for instance in saving the endangered planet. PerForm is a gathering of artists, scientists, writers, curators, activators, creative communities, amongst others, whose knowledges are grounded on a lived history of peoples affected by complexities of modernity, yet charting pathways for regeneration and transformation. PerForm brings the audience of this fellowship programme back to the basics of acting in our personal capacities and performing our personal responsibilities to create liveable societies.

Dr. Ong elaborates, "we live in a technologically interconnected world with information exchanged and traded at high frequency. What is often overlooked and left behind are possible futures that are occurring in less obvious ways and are positively impacting communities. PerForm zooms into these situated or local projects that put forward viable ways of living as responsible custodians of our planet. Be it through environmentally conscious approaches to living, or demystifying the promises of financial capitalism, each PerForm fellow engages in generative dialogue on the relationship between power, control and ethical living."

regions of East and Southeast Asia. He will guide us through his research trajectory that began with his investigation of the so-called Asian financial crisis of the late nineties, to the political economy of post-reform China, and is now focused on the impact of the pandemic and the new socioeconomic realities it presents us with. Spanning the mediums of performance, film, and installation, the works produced from this research have variously examined the relationship between race and financial capitalism, the student as a figure of capitalist modernity and radical culture, the displacement of class politics by a discourse of anti-corruption amidst the systemic crises of late capitalism, and, most recently, the textile industry and its many afterlives within the Greater China region.

PerForm: Ho Rui An & Shubigi Rao

Ho's video installation Asia the Unmiraculous seeks to diffuse the aura of a "miraculous" Asia by examining the entirely profane conditions that set the stage for the first large-scale crisis of globalisation. Ho considers the conditions that made possible the "Asianisation" of the miracle and the crisis that followed.

Accompanying the video installation are fourteen digital prints in the style of real estate listings. One such example is a poster detailing the construction of high-speed rail networks as part of China's ongoing Belt and Road initiative, revealing a juxtaposition when one recalls the history of Chinese immigrants' labour and involvement in the First Transcontinental Railroad of the United States back in the 1860s.

Hosted in conjunction with Ho's work, we see a return of Shubigi Rao as she presents her film, The Pelagic Tracts. Shubigi, visual artist, writer, and theorist is no stranger to PerForm having been its inaugural fellow presented in May 2021. The Pelagic Tracts brings to focus her concern with lived histories of painful destructions and challenges the way we view what is worthy of preservation. In this film, she charts the history of lost and damaged books through a mythical history of book smugglers who used Kochi as one of their bases. She constructs this mythical world from existing letters and records from the libraries, archives, and her interactions in Kochi with local librarians and paper pulpers, as well as the libraries devastated by floods in 2018.

This is the first time that both works will be exhibited in Singapore.
